Re: Mylan Laboratories, Inc. ("Mylan")

Ladies and Gentlemen:

We were astonished to see that within 3 hours after receiving our letter on November 19, 2005, Mylan cavalierly dismissed our $20 per share acquisition proposal as a "tactic" and that less than 3 days after receiving our letter, without even so much as placing a phone call to us to discuss our proposal, Mylan has taken the position that ours is not a serious offer and that discussions between our companies are not in the best interest of Mylan.

We do not, have not and will not make frivolous bids. We advise you that we anticipate contributing, together with our affiliates, at least $1.5 billion of equity to the acquisition of Mylan and are prepared to provide detail regarding our financial condition at your request. (1) We are in discussion with a major financial institution regarding additional funding and based upon those conversations we are confident that once due diligence is provided we would be able to submit to the Board a fully funded transaction. Perhaps if the Board, which has stated that it is in the best position to determine the long-term plans for Mylan, had bothered to speak to us rather than rushing out a press release, it could have been better informed before racing to conclusions.

We think the real test of long-term commitment to a company is reflected by the number of shares purchased with your own money. In our September meetings with Mr. Coury he recounted to us that he was a wealthy man, however, he has reported purchasing less than 2,000 Mylan shares. Yes, the company has given him plenty of stock, but how much of his money has he invested in Mylan? How much have all of the Board members other than Mr. Puskar invested in Mylan?

It is interesting that you have gone back three to five years to support the results obtained by Mylan, which you describe as significantly outperforming "most" industry peers. We have received a study by A.T. Kearney that indicates that for fiscal years 2002-2004, (years 2003 and 2004 being the "Coury years"), Mylan's revenue and EBITDA grew at a compounded annual growth rate of 11.6 percent and 10.7 percent, respectively, compared to 21 and 28 percent for its largest competitors.

Given that performance, we would have expected Mr. Coury's compensation to suffer. However, paradoxical to what we think would be congruous compensation for Mylan performance, in the 2003 fiscal year, Mylan paid Mr. Coury over $2.4 million in cash and stock options which Mylan reported as having a potential realizable value of between $12.7 and $32.7 million. In the face of lagging Mylan performance in the 2004 fiscal year, Mr. Coury was paid over $3 million in cash and received restricted stock which Mylan reported at a value of $6,150,375. We find this to be offensive and, given the fact that Mylan's generic segment revenue decreased by approximately 18 percent for the quarter ending September 30, 2004 over the results for September 30, 2003, it appears to us that the Board's apparent enthusiasm for existing management is misplaced.

Although disappointing, the substantial compensation to Mr. Coury is not surprising, in light of the criticism to which Mylan has been subjected regarding corporate governance. As reported in the interactive edition of the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette on November 2, 2004:

GovernanceMetrics International, a New York firm that evaluates companies on corporate governance issues, ranks Mylan 2.5 on a scale of 1 to 10, with 10 being the best. It faulted the drug maker for compensation practices, lack of independent directors, and business deals between the company and officers, directors or their relatives, said Gavin Anderson, GovernanceMetrics chief executive officer.

Anderson cited the $2 million bonus Coury received in the fiscal year ended March 31, $1.1 million of which was guaranteed. His firm considers seven of Mylan's 11 directors non-independent. Five are current or former officers.

In the face of mounting criticism, more companies are putting more outsiders on their boards, believing shareholder interests are better served if more directors have fewer ties with management. Charles Elson, chairman of the University of Delaware's Weinberg Center for Corporate Governance said independent directors control 75 percent or more of the board seats at most companies.

Mylan has "an exceedingly high percentage of insiders or quasi-insiders compared to what's going on inside corporate America today," said Donald Hambrick, a management professor at Penn State's Smeal College of Business. "I can see why Icahn is trying to do what he is."

If your high-speed rejection of our proposal is indicative of what you have today referred to as the Board's "considered and careful judgments when making any decisions" then perhaps we should not be surprised either by the matters referred to in the above article or by the state of affairs in which Mylan currently finds itself.

Very truly yours,
