EXOR Mischaracterizations Regarding PartnerRe During Proxy Mosaic Dialogue

EXOR MISCHARACTERIZATION: “In term[s] of valuation, the AXIS proposal values PartnerRe approximately $125 per share. That’s the price base on the latest available and [unaffected] AXIS price. While EXOR proposal values PartnerRe $137.50, in addition with $140 of ordinary dividend that a shareholder will receive until closing, which is expected by the end of the year.”

THE FACTS:

The economic book value per share for PartnerRe at 12/31/15E will be in excess of EXOR’s $137.50 opportunistic offer. EXOR’s offer therefore implies a negative franchise value for PartnerRe.

- Shareholders would receive the ordinary dividends regardless of EXOR, so that’s not incremental value.
- The financial benefits of the merger with AXIS Capital are far superior to EXOR’s offer.

The value to PartnerRe shareholders at a conservative 1.00x BV is estimated to be $155.00, and applying a multiple in line with peers results in a value in the $170 per share range.

o A meaningful multiple increase is highly realistic, given the merger is expected to result in double-digit earnings per share (“EPS”) accretion and a return on equity (“ROE”) of over 12%.

o Increased balance sheet strength and capital generation will provide flexibility in the deployment of capital, including reinvestment in the business, the return of $750 million to shareholders immediately following closing, and an additional $2.2 billion of buybacks and dividends expected through 2017, equivalent to 100% of operating earnings.

EXOR MISCHARACTERIZATION: “The preferred shareholders would basically have nothing changed in terms of current terms, rights, and cash treatment. So everything that exists today would also exist if PartnerRe were to be acquired by EXOR.”

THE FACTS:

o Preferred shares would be a fundamentally different security if PartnerRe were owned by EXOR vs. merged with AXIS.

o PartnerRe would be a wholly-owned subsidiary of an investment company vs. independent enterprise solely focused on reinsurance / insurance.

o It would be directly exposed to parent company decisions about management, dividend policy, enterprise risk profile which may be driven by factors extraneous to insurance markets.

o PartnerRe would also be indirectly exposed to financial condition of sister companies Fiat Chrysler Automobiles (“FCA”) and CNH Industrial – non-investment grade rated industrial entities that are marginally profitable and capital intensive and cyclical.

o The EXOR proposal also effectively nullifies the valuable voting rights of the preferred shareholders on any subsequent transaction.

EXOR MISCHARACTERIZATION: “EXOR rating has been reaffirmed by Standard and Poor’s after the submission of the offer for PartnerRe.”

THE FACTS:

S&P has NOT provided a view on PartnerRe’s ratings in relation to a sale to EXOR.

S&P has not taken a view nor has it made any public statements regarding the credit or financial strength ratings of PartnerRe in the event of an EXOR acquisition.

EXOR’s statements with regard to PartnerRe’s potential credit ratings are misleading, and do not reflect the views of S&P or S&P’s analyst for PartnerRe.

PartnerRe does not anticipate that S&P will comment on the potential rating implications of a hypothetical EXOR acquisition of PartnerRe unless and until a definitive merger agreement is in place.

EXOR MISCHARACTERIZATION: “In terms of regulatory approval, it’s [going to] be very simple.”

THE FACTS:

It is misleading to say that it will be “very simple” for EXOR to obtain regulatory approvals. The regulatory approval process will be intrusive and protracted, especially for a financial buyer like EXOR.

EXOR and its controlling shareholders are unknown to regulators in jurisdictions where insurance regulatory approvals are required, and despite EXOR’s statements it has not owned any insurance companies in relevant jurisdictions in over ten years.

Regulators are very focused on acquisitions of reinsurance business by financial buyers like EXOR and regulators will not shy away from investigating EXOR’s plans and strategies for PartnerRe in light of EXOR’s portfolio of capital intensive, low-margin companies and that EXOR would be highly levered following an acquisition of PartnerRe.

Regulators can also impose a variety of stipulations on EXOR regarding the future conduct of the business, and EXOR has not undertaken a contractual commitment to do everything necessary to satisfy the regulators.

Neither EXOR nor its controlling shareholders are contractually committed to make the required regulatory filings or provide the necessary information, which means that key filing parties have no obligation to cooperate and make sure that the filings are made expeditiously.

All this simply means is that EXOR's transaction faces a protracted, intrusive and complicated regulatory approval process despite repeated claims from EXOR to the contrary. The EXOR offer will not close this year, whereas the AXIS merger is on track to close in the third quarter of this year.

EXOR MISCHARACTERIZATION: “[Not walking away from this transaction] is explicitly stated, but more than our word, what matters is the contract. If EXOR walk[s] away, PartnerRe board can seek legal damage against a company that has $15 billion of asset value. And it’s listed.”

THE FACTS:

Neither EXOR nor the Agnelli Family is obligated under the contract to file and obtain regulatory approval in any jurisdiction.

Should EXOR or its controlling family members elect to not appropriately pursue regulatory approvals, EXOR’s shell subsidiaries have NO legal ability to force EXOR and its controlling family members to file for regulatory approval – hence the parent “guarantee” is insufficient.

Legal recourse could take years and is unpredictable – this doesn’t protect PartnerRe shareholders.

EXOR didn’t take PartnerRe’s offer to conduct due diligence, which demonstrates that it doesn’t have any real risk in their offer and the price is well below fair value.

EXOR MISCHARACTERIZATION: “In [PartnerRe’s] preliminary proxy, we saw that essentially the transaction committee which have given a mandate to acquire a company, then decide to contact AXIS with no market check to agree a transaction and essentially in one month...without checking any other potential interested party.”

THE FACTS:

This is simply untrue. This statement ignores that fact that the Transaction Committee has always acted within the bounds of the mandate give to it by the PartnerRe board of directors.

The PartnerRe board of directors explicitly authorized the Transaction Committee to explore the transaction referred to in EXOR’s statement above, as well as any other strategic transaction that it would deem to be in the best interests of PartnerRe and its shareholders, and to recommend such transaction to the PartnerRe Board of Directors.

Under this clear mandate from the PartnerRe board of directors, the Transaction Committee and senior management led an extensive process to explore various strategic options and a range of potential transactions with companies in the reinsurance and primary insurance markets, including considering if an outright sale made sense.

After evaluating a full range of alternatives, it became clear that merging with AXIS Capital – a strategic partner with a roughly even split of reinsurance and insurance businesses – was the most compelling opportunity for our shareholders at this time and satisfied the key objectives of PartnerRe’s long-term business plan.

- This merger of equals was unanimously approved by the PartnerRe board of directors.

EXOR MISCHARACTERIZATION: “I think what’s very important is that shareholders are really faced with a choice, which is to vote for a merger with AXIS or to vote an acquisition by EXOR.”

THE FACTS:

- This is not true. It is important to remember that a vote against is not a vote for EXOR’s proposal.
- If shareholders vote ‘FOR’ the proposal, then they will be voting for the amalgamation with AXIS.
- If shareholders vote ‘AGAINST’ the proposal, then they will be voting for PartnerRe to remain a standalone company.

EXOR CLAIM: PartnerRe shareholders are better off reinvesting EXOR’s cash premium proceeds in a basket of AXIS/PartnerRe (re)insurance peers.

THE FACTS:

- If indeed EXOR believes that public markets can deliver 8% return with more diversification and less risk, why are they themselves not buying a basket of stocks?
- The logical conclusion from EXOR’s argument is for shareholders of all reinsurance companies to sell their individual holdings and buy the market or index, therefore buying exposure to all reinsurance companies.
- We firmly believe that the merger should provide returns well in excess of the peer companies given the strong position of the combined company with clients and distributors, and the significant efficiency and capital benefits of the combination.
- The essence of EXOR’s argument is that PartnerRe shareholders should give away their shares at a low valuation and take their chances elsewhere, leaving all the upside in PartnerRe to EXOR.
