A replay of a Cigna Corporation employee meeting was made available to employees.

Topic 2, if that wasn't enough for us to do, we decided, I think, on March 8th to announce our intent to acquire Express Scripts and we surprised a lot of folks when we made that announcement. We surprised David folks for two reasons. One, in a novel concept in the United States that is supposed to be well governed by Cordani: SEC laws and rules, et cetera, nothing leaked. I find it kind of amazing but it's a unique observation. Nothing leaked. Our conversation started back in October and culminated in March. Nothing leaked. And that's a surprising event.

And secondly, some folks thought we were going to take a different action. So why do we take the action we took boiled down to three very simple reasons. We concluded it was the undisputable best action we could take to further our ability to deliver on the affordability promise. We have an affordability crisis in this country. Nobody could continue to afford to pay for the status quo. And even though we are delivering the lowest medical cost trend in the industry five years in a row and in 2017, our trend was below - as a franchise was below 3%, several points better than our competition, that's not acceptable. And we're going to stretch ourselves and strive to be able to put ourselves in the position to deliver medical cost trend that looks more like CPI which is what our marketplace could tolerate and deliver.

When you think about pharmaceuticals, pharmaceuticals quickly went from 10% of the overall cost equation to 20% and it's growing, especially pharmaceuticals are the fastest-growing component of it, but the medical professional community in the room and on the phone will know that typically when there's a gap in care in the United States, it ties with pharmaceuticals in some way, shape or form, wrong drug, wrong dose, wrong duration. So the opportunity to further affordability, further quality and further drive improvement of lives is Priority Number 1.

Two, it dramatically expands our addressable market or our distribution capabilities. What has shaped us extraordinarily well to date is our go deep and go deeper strategy where we focus on a limited number of markets or MSAs in the United States and we drive with intensity.

On a services based portfolio, the go deep strategy is not critical because you're not trading off a medical network. So the ability to take PBM services, behavioral health services, decision support services, population health program services, et cetera, and package them up and sell them to employer clients, health plans, governmental entities and increasingly, healthcare professionals, that dramatically expands our addressable markets with a service-based franchise; yet further strengthens our integrated franchise by having a broad diverse pharmacy set of capabilities, including specialty.

And third, it does it in a very financial and capital smart way. And the reason why that's an important piece, it has the ability to keep feeding our ability to invest back in ourselves from a financial standpoint to drive that forward.

If you put a bowl around it, it brings 80-plus million additional customers and relationships to us. Billions -- and I said the word "billions" -- of additional customer touch points and an unprecedented level of data and insights from a longitudinal standpoint to understand individuals. So it's exciting through that lens.

We expect and seek to close the transaction by the end of this calendar year. We're driving through that process. The DOJ has got a lot on their plate. So we'll aggressively manage that with the Department of Justice and seek to direct that forward.
